

Student Involvement in Self Access Centers Conference

Self-Access Learning Centers:

Of the Students, By the Students, For the Students

Call for Presentations

Self-access centers aim to encourage participation of highly skilled and motivated learners in different ways, through learner-generated materials, peer advising and community-building events.

Another way of involving these students in self-access language learning is to create the authentic experience of organizing and planning, and attending and presenting at student-initiated conferences.

Sugiyama Jogakuen University in collaboration with Nanzan University and Japan Association of Self Access Centers is pleased to announce a call for presentations for the First Student Involvement in Self Access Centers Conference.

Interested students are welcome to submit a 200-word proposal for presentation about their self-access centers and their experiences in those centers. The presentations can be made independently, in groups, and in collaboration with language teachers and learning advisors. The conference promises to be an excellent opportunity for US= STUDENTS to share OUR self-access related experiences, exchange OUR practical ideas, and inspire and be inspired by STUDENTS from other parts of Japan.
